The Biological Products Industry Alliance (BPIA), a trade association representing the biopesticides and biostimulants industries is holding the Sustainability Symposium for biological products manufacturers and marketers, distributors, food processors, growers, and service providers supporting agriculture, public health, forestry, and specialty markets such as home and garden, turf and ornamentals, and structural pest control.

The Sustainability Symposium will include topics such as growing consumer interest in biological products, the role of biological products in integrated pest management, what exemption from tolerance really means, and how to continue building credibility for the biostimulants industry.

The Sustainability Symposium is being held in conjunction with BPIA's annual Fall Meeting on October 10th to spread the word about integrating biological products into sustainability goals.
