Cleveland Pollinator & Native Plant Symposium

9/21/2018 - 9/21/2018

The Ohio State University Wooster Campus Conference Center, Wooster, Ohio

The 4th Annual Symposium will focus on shifting traditional horticultural practices to designing landscapes for beauty, biodiversity and ecological benefits. Immerse yourself in a full day program exploring the importance of increasing natural diversity and ecological resilience. Join in the conversation with six regional and national experts to increase your knowledge of pollinators, native plants and planting designs. Welcome are landscape architects, designers, educators, master gardeners, homeowners, naturalists and anyone eager to learn about creating pollinator and wildlife habitats that are not only aesthetically pleasing, but also form an ecologically valuable alliance. The all-day symposium includes breakfast, lunch and refreshments.
